UMass study: Teachers may be reluctant to discuss race and racism in classroom

AMHERST – Across the U.S., K-12 public school teachers face significant psychological barriers to discussing issues of race and racism with their students, according to new research by a University of Massachusetts social psychologist.

Linda Tropp, professor of psychological and brain sciences, examined how teachers' implicit racial biases and concerns about appearing racist may affect their intentions and confidence about engaging their students in race talk. The findings were recently published online by the journal Social Psychology of Education.

"This research was done to try to understand what can sometimes get in the way of teachers' best intentions to want to talk about race with their students," said Tropp, who has extensive experience working in schools and seeking to support teachers in engaging students in conversations about race and other important and sensitive topics. "How do we equip teachers to engage in these conversations? What we're hoping is that findings from this research can be used to inform future professional development programs for teachers, so that they feel more prepared to 'go there' with their students."

Analyzing data from two large surveys, each including responses from more than 1,000 K-12 teachers, Tropp found that teachers' implicit racial biases and their explicit fears of being perceived as racist both independently contributed to lower intentions to talk about race with their students. These psychological barriers are still evident, even after Tropp took into account numerous other variables such as teachers' years of experience, their demographic characteristics, characteristics of the schools in which they teach and their own prior exposure to diversity training.

Recent teacher training and professional development programs have typically focused on educating teachers about implicit racial biases - that is, unconscious racial biases they may have and about which they may have limited awareness - without sufficiently addressing teachers' conscious concerns about how they may be seen, or how their comments may be interpreted, Tropp explains.

"This is not just something unique to teachers, but something that we all experience in our society, where people are very quick to judge what we say," Tropp says. "It's understandable that we would have concerns about how what we say might be perceived or received by others."

Tropp emphasizes that future training efforts need to consider how both implicit racial biases and conscious concerns about being seen as racist may curb teachers' willingness to engage students in meaningful and productive conversations around race. Tropp's paper states, "As we examine potential barriers to teachers' engagement in race talk with students, we must also learn how to support teachers effectively when they are called upon to facilitate these discussions."

In light of current political and social debates about race-related topics in school curricula, Tropp says it is increasingly urgent for teachers to discuss race in the classroom to help students process what they see and hear outside of the classroom. She notes, "By providing students with opportunities to engage in meaningful discussions about race, teachers can prepare them for respectful exchanges of perspectives with others and full participation as engaged citizens in an increasingly multifaceted and diverse society."

SEEKING STAFF WRITER

Award-winning, family-owned Turley Publications, based in Palmer, is seeking a storyteller who is curious about everything, and who understands how town government works to join our team of weekly reporters.

Experience in covering town government is a huge plus, and any experience in community journalism is as well. Staff writers cover all aspects of communities from features to municipal meetings to crimes and fires. Successful candidates must have people skills, plenty of curiosity and able to tell a story.

If you're a self-starter who enjoys community journalism and who can envision themselves connecting with our communities, we encourage you to apply for this position.

Qualifications should include:

- Bachelor's degree or equivalent experience
- A determination to get the story, whatever it might be
- Equally comfortable writing hard news, features and event coverage
- Ability to write clean copy in a fast-paced, deadline-driven environment
- Proficiency in Associated Press style

Please tell us in a cover letter why you would be a good fit for our editor's position and send it along with a resume and three writing samples to Executive Editor Cliff Clark at cclark@turley.com.

FEMA awards nearly $4.8 Million to Massachusetts

BOSTON - The Federal Emergency Management Agency will be sending nearly $4.8 million to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts to reimburse the commonwealth for the costs associated with caring for youths in its custody during the COVID-19 pandemic.

The $4,788,225 Public Assistance grant will reimburse the Massachusetts Department of Children and Families for the costs associated with operating safely during the pandemic between July 2020 and July 2021.

The department temporarily closed its congregate care facilities, and contracted with several vendors to provide safety units, with single bedrooms and site care service placement for youths who tested positive or were presumed positive for the COVID-19 virus:

The Justice Resource Institute, Inc. - $1,827,258;

The Stetson School, Inc. - $628,202;

The Home for Little Wanderers, Inc. - $1,756,428; and

Centerboard, Inc. - $370,499

The Department of Children and Families also contracted with U.S. Security Associates, Inc. for $205,837 to provide security services at these locations.

FEMA's Public Assistance program is an essential source of funding for states and communities recovering from a federally declared disaster or emergency.

T-BIRDS from page 8

Highly regarded for his professionalism and tireless dedication, McDonald quickly forged a strong partnership with the Blues' new affiliate, the Springfield Thunderbirds. He worked through a challenging 2021-22 season - one impacted again by the effects of the COVID-19 pandemic - to ice one of the most successful teams in the long history of AHL hockey in Springfield. There is perhaps no greater testament to McDonald's impact this season than the fact that players who suited up for the Thunderbirds skated in a combined total of 249 NHL games with the St. Louis Blues during the 2021-22 campaign.

"Kevin has been one of the most highly respected executives in the AHL throughout his career, and we could not be happier to see his hard work recognized league-wide," said Costa. "He is the ultimate professional, an outstanding evaluator of on-ice talent, and an even better person. We join the rest of his peers in congratulating him on a much-deserved honor."
