appreciation for art nowadays.”
“It’s just awesome to see my art here, and everyone gets to see it,” Barnes said.

She also appreciates the teachers, encouraging fellow students to take a class.

“It’s a really good department, especially if you want to get started into art,” Barnes said. “Art is very fun, even if you’re not creative with it. It’s still a fun thing to do and try out.”

Dan Delisle has taught computer art for eight years, having made a second career after a layoff.

He praised his colleagues for inspiring the students.

“Getting to see what the teachers are doing, I think, is inspiring to all of us. Getting to see the art that their students are making at their tutelage is just wonderful,” Delisle said.

Delisle said art teaches problem-solving skills.

“The process is you present yourself with a problem, you saturate yourself with information and you just start working through it, and that’s kind of when the magic happens. If you work long and hard enough on something, you come up with some wonderful discoveries,” Delisle said.

Studio Art Teacher Jacqueline Gallo said the event “is the highlight of our year.”

“They work so hard, and it’s really a testament to their ability and the talent in this community. It’s so important to get people to see this because art goes on the back burner,” Gallo said.

Megan Boucher draws, paints and recently got into clay sculpting, including making a rat statue.

“It’s a really great way to be involved with the school and showcase what I’ve worked hard on. I’ve helped set it up too, so it feels like an accomplishment,” Boucher said.

Boucher appreciates the teachers.
“I think the teachers are just really nice and generous to offer such great resources for kids and the opportunity to take all these classes and let people get creative. It’s really nice,” Boucher said.

Gallo wants the community to know art is a valid subject and “part of everyday life.”

“Design and art is everywhere, so I would say put it at the top priority as something that’s a valid experience for your children,” Gallo said.

Boucher also encourages students to take an art class.

“Definitely go for it even if you don’t think you’re the best artist ever. Art is all different and can be perceived in different ways. As long as you put heart into it, it’s going to be great,” Boucher said.
