cial ed, as we continue to grow our preschool. We currently do not have someone overseeing that. That's absorbed by the executive team," Ware said.

The position would be new; it is not currently in the district's budget. Ware said it would be funded by ESSER money initially, as one of the allowances through ESSER funds is to cover positions that support evidence-based practices such as early childhood learning.

"So, this person would be under independent contract, and we're looking to actually start this person sooner rather than later because our lottery starts very soon, and we want to get in front of it," Ware said.

Ware acknowledged that ES-

SER funds are going away in September 2024, so he said a three-fold conversation is ongoing to identify funding. First, the position will have to be put into the budget, and Ware is working with his team on the budget planning process.

Secondly, the position will also be funded through the Student Opportunity Act, which allots money to support early childhood learning. Third, the district has vacant positions on the budget that Ware purposely didn't fill to fund the early childhood coordinator role.

"I have an interpreter position that I didn't fill on purpose to actually support this position," Ware said. "This is just going off of need and paying attention to what was already in the budget and reworking some of those vacancies that I'm looking not to fill that are not teacher driven but are on the independent contract side."

When the position is filled, the early childhood coordinator would report to Assistant Superintendent for Accountability and Instruction Jennifer Belville. Before the School Committee voted to approve the job description, Ware again stressed the importance of establishing the role.

"This is coming out of need because of the situation we are in with our early childhood situation; the numbers and the actual overseeing of the new curriculum we implemented and things we need to do to be in compliance to actually continue to support our programs," he said.
